Wartburg remembers Roiseland

Dr. Donald S. Roiseland, chair of the physics department, died Dec. 23, 1992, at home from complications of cancer. Wartburg remembered him in a memorial service Wednesday morning.

He was born May 12,1934, in South St. Paul, MN, the son of Adolph J. and Rachelle (Cole) Roiseland. He graduated from South St. Paul High School in 1952 and attended St. Olaf College in Northfield, MN, where he graduated Summa Cum Laude with a physics major. Between 1956 and 1963, he earned his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in physics from the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

He worked as a research physicist with the G.T. Sheldahl Co. for the U.S. Space Program before accepting a teaching position at St. Olaf College in 1966. In 1968, he moved to Waverly and joined the faculty at Wartburg College.

On July 5,1969, he married Dorothy K. Bergman. They made their home in Waverly, where Roiseland later became chair of the Wartburg Physics Department.

He was diagnosed with cancer in October 1991, which led to several surgeries and hospitalizations. He was able to continue teaching until shortly before his death.

He was an active member of Redeemer Lutheran Church, was a member of Gideons International, Sigma Xi Scientific Research Society, Sons of Norway-Solqlimt Lodge in Cedar Falls, American Association of Physics Teachers, Iowa Academy of Science and the Oriental Missionary Society-Men for Mission.

Roiseland is survived by his mother, Rachelle Roiseland of Waverly; his wife, Dorothy of Waverly; his three children, Renee, Alan and Kevin, all of Waverly; one brother and his wife, Richard and Karin Roiseland of Plymouth, MN; and 10 nieces and nephews. He was preceded in death by his father, Adolph, in 1972.

Tree symbolizes Vietnam protest

BY BRADLEY WOOD

One Friday afternoon as I was walking to the Communication Arts Center to work on the Fortress, I noticed a group of people standing around a tree outside of Hebron Hall.

As I walked closer to the group, I thought, "What are they doing standing around this tree?"

I noticed Dr. Terry Lindell, associate professor of history, so I figured it must be for a class. As I reached the group, Lindell dismissed them and they scattered. I recognized Marlene Geurts, '93

I asked, "What are you doing standing around this pine tree?"

Geurts laughed and said it was for the Vietnam War class. That confused me more.

She explained that the tree had been planted next to Players' Theater in the 1970s to protest the Vietnam War. The school moved the tree later when it was thought it would be torn down as part of renovation plans.

Fascinated by this information, I decided to talk to Lindell. The first question I asked was how he became aware of the tree.

He said that a student of his, Bill Shea, discovered the information while writing a paper for Lindell's historiography class. Shea had talked to John Lobby, who was plant superintendent during the time the tree was planted. Lobby remembered, among other things, which tree it was.

Lindell then noticed that the new entrance into campus was at that time planned to be on Eighth Street, and the group of pine trees—including the one planted for the war protest—was to be taken down. He informed President Robert Vogel and Dean James Pence, and they decided to have the tree moved to its present location in Clinton Field.

Lindell then directed me to the archives to find out more about events on the day the tree was planted. The following is a summary of the Oct. 18, 1969, Trumpet article.

A war moratorium was held at Wartburg Oct. 15, 1969, as part of a national observance to protest the war in Vietnam.

Protesters had a panel discussion on campus about the war and then marched to the Bremer County Courthouse. They had a memorial service for peace and honored soldiers who had died in the war. Among the ministers presiding was The Rev. Herman Diers, professor of religion.

One of the final events of the day was planting the "tree of life," which was done by march leader Alan Krueger.

I always smile now as I walk out of Hebron Hall and past that tree. I know that the tree is not just another pine tree, but that it is a tree with a purpose. It makes me proud of those who were at Wartburg before me because they tried to make a difference.

New term means new name for SAC

The Student Activities Committee exists no more. That doesn't mean there is no longer an organization to sponsor campus events. It simply means SAC has changed its name.

The renamed Campus Activities Board will have the same functions it has always had, said Mathews George, '93, chair of the publicity committee. The only difference is the name.

"We changed the name basically because SAC had some bad connotations," George said.

Some of those bad connotations involved the dispute over the organization's move into Players' Theatre, George said.

The main reason for changing its name, however, was to decrease confusion.

"We are really an executive board with small committees below us," George said.

CAB oversees such committees as the films committee and publicity committee. Members hope the new name will help students keep the executive board separate from the individual committees.

George also said CAB is planning to provide more campus events this term and is open to suggestions from students about activities they would like.

CDC organizes first camp recruitment fair for February

Wartburg College will hold its first official camp counselor recruitment fair Wednesday, Feb. 3. The fair is being organized through the Career Development Center under coordination of Marlene Geurts, '93.

"This is a trial run," Geurts said. "In the past individual camps have come to campus, but nothing has ever been organized."

She said Will Smith, CDC director, suggested the camp fair idea last spring as a way to coordinate the visits of individual camp representatives to Wartburg. The fair will be conducted like job and camp fairs at the three state universities and Drake University.

Currently, 35 camps are expected to attend the fair. The fair will be held in Buhr Lounge from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. There will also be a table with information from camps that could not send representatives, Geurts said.

She stressed that not all the camps are Lutheran. There are boy and girl scout, YMCA and special needs camps, with most located in the Midwest.

"This is not something just for people going into camping," Geurts said. "It's a real good chance to develop leadership and communication skills."

She said many people don't consider being camp counselors because of the low pay. But what they don't realize is that all room and board is paid for and they don't have to commute to work.

Geurts is also working on a student guide with information about each camp coming to the fair. She said it should be available by Feb. 1.

New photocopy policy more hassle than good

Have you heard about the new photocopier policy at Wartburg? If you haven't, it might be in your best interest to take note—especially if you belong to an organization that needs to make photocopies.

The new policy states that "photocopier keys are for use by faculty or permission slip only. Students and community individuals must use money." This doesn't seem like an outrageous rule to follow at first glance. But once you think about it, it takes on the dimensions of a heavy burden. A burden that falls on the shoulders of organization executives.

Take, for example, the Trumpet. We don't often do it, but occasionally we need to reduce a graphic or make a copy of something we're going to run. If we need a permission slip like a common high school student would, it's going to slow down our progress on Sunday nights considerably.

Bob Gremmels has better things to do than run down to the Communication Arts Center to fill out permission slips. And when he's gone, who's going to give us that permission?

Campus ministry organizations are going to suffer also. Groups such as Spirit Song and Faith Alive don't have an adviser or sponsor as such—they work through Campus Ministry Board. Sure, Pastor Trachte would willingly give them a permission slip if needed. But why should he have to in the first place?

Student organizations have their own treasurers to manage business affairs. This seems to indicate they are capable of responsibility.

If students are charging "illegal" copies, then let the organizations deal with them. And if they don't belong to an organization, then Wartburg needs to work out some system that doesn't penalize innocent parties.

Wartburg is as good as it gets?

It's All Too Much

Andrew Howie

Ironically, I was amazed to discover that the individuals in my life who most want me to get out into the "real world"—if one actually exists—and leave college are also the ones who do the best job convincing me the real world stinks.

While gathering with my family over the holidays, they would ratify their implications by saying, "Cherish your years in college because they will be the best years of your life." What is that supposed to do, make me feel better?

It's not like I've heard that phrase only once, but regularly. Every time I hear it I reflect upon my college life and think to myself, "These are supposed to be the best years of my life?" Obviously I have not crossed the great chasm bordering college life and real life. So I basically have to take my elders' words of wisdom for granted. But I still wonder what they actually mean by telling me that college is as good as it gets.

O.K. College definitely does have its good times: continually being surrounded by friends, living in a decent dwelling, having almost all my meals prepared for me and enjoying trips around the country and world with the choir. I also don't have to spend eight hours at work every day, and I have to pay little in taxes.

But let's look at the bad things too. Everything is exorbitantly expensive, my freedom of choice is greatly limited (i.e., what I want to eat, where I want to live, what I can and can't do on campus).

Now, how different is real life from college life? We would still be surrounded by friends, live in a decent place, travel when we found the time and money... But hey, that might be the clue: time and money. I hate to break it to the people in the real world, but those commodities are also in short supply at college.

In my naivete, I also consider spending my time earning money to be the same as spending money earning a college education. So what are the big differences? Life, whether at college or in the real world, can be difficult or enjoyable. It just depends upon what you make of it. I will give people in the real world this much—I am not looking forward to paying off my debt for "the four best years of my life."

I guess what perturbs me most about the constant reminding that college is the best thing I am ever going to get is the unavoidable conclusion that the rest of my life is all downhill from here. What have I to look forward to? This attitude makes me think graduation day should be treated as a funeral. Several years from now, when I look back on my days at Wartburg, I hope to recall those memories with joy. But my greatest hope is to realize that my life in the real world will be far better.

Changes needed for kids' sake

As social work majors at Wartburg College, we are writing in regard and concern of Jerry Nelson.

Jerry Nelson was a three-year-old boy from the Quad City area who died at University Hospitals in Iowa City on July 31. Jerry was a victim of repeated physical and alleged sexual abuse by his mother's boyfriend, Douglas Oaks.

On several occasions, reports of Jerry's abuse were brought to the attention of the Iowa Department of Human Services and Illinois Department of Children and Family Services. These reports were considered unfounded, even though family members and a doctor reported to authorities that he was being physically and sexually abused.

In our opinion, the result of this case illustrates the need for a nationally accessible registry for child abuse. Without a national registry, an abuser in Iowa can move to any state and commit offenses without the release of his prior record. This is a major reason why social workers have difficulty substantiating allegations of abuse.

A second need is for unfounded cases to remain on file longer than 10 days. We recommend that cases remain in a sealed file for at least one year and could only be released by a court order. This would also give social workers more information on which to base their assessments in repeated abuse cases.

A final concern of ours involves the lack of funding for social services. Currently, case workers are overloaded, and consequently, proper services can not be provided to meet the needs of children. We need more funds to insure the safety of our nation's children and their future.

Message of hope in midst of troubles

At a concert at Lincoln Center in New York recently, the musician and peace philosopher Sri Chinmoy read the following message for the year 1993:

"God is dreaming,
Newness singing,
Oneness blossoming,
Fullness dancing.

Hope no more gropes,
Life without slopes.
Splendid depths and heights
Transform bondage-nights."

It is so strikingly different in tone from the sad and troublesome times we have lived through recently that it made a lasting impression on me.

I would like to share it with your readers and wish all of them a year of newness, oneness and hope.

Assault cases still open

I want to provide a brief update on the two sexual assault incidents reported earlier in the Fall Term. Neither incident has led to a definitive resolution.

In one case, the rape survivor met with the county attorney and stated she did not want criminal charges to be filed. She also elected not to utilize the college's sexual abuse policy and file a formal complaint with the Student Life Office. In the other case, no perpetrator was identified.

Police have questioned several Wartburg students, but no charges have been filed. The police still retain jurisdiction and the case remains open. It's important that the campus community not forget the importance of these issues for all concerned. And that we continue to work toward a violence-free campus.

Alexander Smith,
Dean of Students

Not sending grades home is a dirty trick. After anxiously awaiting all break, students see them and want to go back home and cry.

Seriously, thanks for the clear sidewalks

I would like to express my sincere gratitude to the Wartburg maintenance crew for doing a fine job of keeping campus sidewalks clear of snow and ice.

Last year I submitted a similar letter regarding my appreciation for Wartburg's clear walkways. Some people mistakenly chose to take it as sarcasm, but I was serious.

Sometimes I wish they didn't do such a good job, like when I have test.Pushing a wheelchair through inches and inches of snow makes for a pretty darned good reason to miss class. Then there was the time I found myself trapped in the residence halls the day before Thanksgiving. Fortunately, I managed to burrow through to my car to get home for turkey.

In all honesty, the biggest reason I love clear sidewalks is because of the stupid question so many people ask. If I had a dollar for every time I've heard, "You ever think about putting chains on those tires?" I might be able to afford this institution of learning.

Student notes gender differences at conference

BY DANIELLA DATSKOVSKAYA

"We must concentrate on difference until difference doesn't make any difference any more."

This was the theme of the Conference for Women in Higher Education Administration "Women of the 90's: Leading the Way Up," on Nov. 12-13 in Cedar Rapids.

As a recipient of the Carol Rocklin Kay Memorial Scholarship with Randi Ellefson, director of the Health and Wellness Center, I had an opportunity to attend this conference.

The issue of women's equality with men in the U.S. in areas such as employment, education, child care and legal rights initially was surprising for me. I come from a society where equality of genders was declared in 1917 after the Socialistic Revolution.

Datskovskaya

Gender inequality realized

After living in the U.S. for more than a year, I started to realize that differences of attitude in society toward males and females do exist. I find it hard to accept and to comprehend these different attitudes and how the process of striving for equality works.

"The Way Up," I hoped, would clear up some of these questions, and it did.

Now, evaluating the conference, I think the many ideas and topics presented there helped me to understand the issue. But at the same time many questions were left unanswered. One thing I could observe and feel is that there is a need for dialogue between the genders, a need to acknowledge the problem and a need to come up with solutions.

Undoubtedly, the conference contributed to this dialogue. Addresses from Midwest leading women including Dolores Cross, president of Chicago State University, and Julie M. Davis, dean of the University of Minnesota were practical, educational and motivating.

These two women had to go through long and uneasy roads before they could be considered avant-garde Midwest women. And they can proudly say they are "no longer the first and the only."

Insightful sessions

Besides hearing excellent keynote speakers, members of the conference were able to attend sessions of interest. The one I enjoyed most was a book review session of "You Just Don't Understand" by Dr. Deborah Tannen.

"Each person's life is lived as a series of conversations. And their effects on relationships has been the focus of my career as a sociolinguist," wrote Tannen.

"In this book, I listen to the voices of women and men. I make sense of seemingly senseless misunderstandings that haunt our relationships and show that a man and a woman can interpret the same conversation differently, even when there is no apparent misunderstanding," she said. "I explain why sincere attempts to communicate are so often confounded, and how we can prevent or relieve some of the frustration."

At this session, many women expressed similar experiences as those described in the book. One of the conclusions we came to is that in communication with the opposite gender, the goal of men is to preserve independence and avoid failure, whereas women try to preserve intimacy and avoid isolation.

Titles of other sessions offered included "Sexual Harassment in the Workplace," "Equal Opportunity for Girls and Women in Sports" and "Leading the Way with Leisure in the Midst of Your Life."

Improvements needed

I consider the time spent at the conference very productive and useful. In the coming years I still would like to see some improvements occur in the work of Iowa's "women's forum."

One of those improvements should be more active participation of college and university female students who could bring in their personal experiences as college/university leaders. Also, students could learn a lot from those who have made their "way up."

"Dwelling on the problem is self-destructive—we need practical recommendations." This is what the conference meant to do, and it fulfilled its purpose successfully. Participants left for their colleges and universities throughout Iowa inspired and ready to share new ideas with others.

(Editor's note: Datskovskaya is from the Ukraine.)

Startling stats about work force disparities

The Carol Rocklin Kay Memorial Scholarship Fund was established in 1988 as a way to encourage student participation in The Way Up conferences. Carol Kay, program chair for The Way Up IV, served as assistant to the vice-president for student affairs at Iowa State University.

Emphasis is placed upon the importance of involving women undergraduate and graduate students—the future faculty members and administrators of our colleges and universities—in The Way Up conferences.

The conferences focus on a variety of problems facing women today. Topics such as sexual harassment, equal opportunity, higher education and the future of women are addressed.

The following statistics are taken from an article "Women and Work" by Anne Field, SELF magazine, January 1992.

- Women in the work force earning $75,000 or more annually, 1990: 255,000.
- Men in the work force earning $75,000 or more annually, 1990: 2,603,000.
- Average starting salary and bonus of female MBAs from top 20 schools: $54,749.
- Average starting salary and bonus of male MBAs from top 20 schools: $61,400.
- Median annual income of full-time working women, 1990: $19,822.
- Median annual income of full-time working men, 1990: $27,678.
- Women earn 72 cents for every dollar a man earns.

A study done by the U.S. Department of Education found that "women's grade-point averages in college were higher than men's in all fields—even traditionally male-dominated courses such as statistics and calculus. However, women earned as much as men in only seven of 33 major occupations after graduation."

Meistersinger band festival successful

BY JENNIFER AMOS

The 26th Annual Meistersinger Honor Band Festival Concert took place Sunday afternoon in Neumann Auditorium. The Honor Band was composed of 198 high school students throughout the Midwest.

The students began rehearsing for the concert Saturday. Sunday they outstandingly performed four pieces under the leadership of guest conductor, Dr. James Croft of Florida State University.

Previous to the Meistersinger Honor Band's performance, the Wartburg College Concert Band under the direction of Dr. Robert E. Lee gave a brilliant performance of three pieces including an orchestral transcription of Verdi's "Manzoni Requiem".

"We think some people are going to hear something they've never heard before," Lee said of the requiem. This piece consisted of a vocal quartet, which is unusual in a band concert.

The audience gave the bands a standing ovation. It appears that the 1993 Meistersinger Honor Band concert was a success.

Wins against Penn, Central put men at top of conference

BY TIM SEEGER

The men's basketball team started off its conference season with two road victories against Central Friday and William Penn Saturday.

Wartburg beat defending Iowa Conference co-champion Central 79-61. Central is in a rebuilding year, as they lost four starters to graduation.

Coach Buzz Levick said strong backcourt play, high-percentage shot selection and aggressive defense helped the Knights to victory against Central.

The Knights jumped out to an early 30-12 lead. By the end of the game, Central was forced to play a full-court press, and Wartburg benefitted with many easy lay-ups and free throws to insure the win.

Levick said he was impressed with the play of his guards.

"This was the best guard play we've had from all four of them (Brian Farrell, Doug Hall, Jason Quillen and Mark Franzen) all in one night," Levick said.

Farrell led all scorers with 17 points. Hall and Rob Kain added 12 points apiece.

The Knights beat William Penn 71-61 Saturday.

William Penn opened up against the Knights playing a four-corner offense, Levick said.

But Wartburg got the early lead and didn't allow the Statesmen to control the tempo.

Rob Kain and Doug Hall led the Knights with 16 and 13 points, respectively.

"Since Christmas break, we've been getting a lot more production out of our bench," Levick said. "So we feel more comfortable using our depth."

The men will host Dubuque and Luther Friday and Saturday.

Cold shooting puts women at 1-1 in Iowa Conference

BY TIM SEEGER

Wartburg's women's basketball team suffered its second loss of the year against Central Friday, but rebounded with a win versus William Penn.

The women are now 1-1 in the Iowa Conference and 9-2 overall.

Against Central the women lost 83-64. Shooting percentages played a big role in the game. Central shot 65 percent compared to Wartburg's 33 percent.

Along with the big difference in shooting, the Knights also suffered a five-minute drought where they scored only one point.

Kathy Roberts scored 27 points and Michelle Grow had 13.

The Lady Knights were again rather cold from the field against William Penn, but they still managed to win 73-64.

Roberts and Grow were again the only scroers in double figures. Roberts had 22 and Grow had 16.

Although disappointed after losing the conference opener, Severson stressed that there is still a long way to go.

"Being 1-1, we're still right in the race," she said.

Severson said both Kathy Roberts and Michelle Grow played well offensively.

"Right now we need some other people to step up and do some more scoring for us," Severson said.

The Lady Knights will host Dubque Friday night and then Luther Saturday. Both games begin at 6 p.m.

Wrestlers roll over opponents at Saturday's Iowa Duals

The Wartburg wrestling team won all five of its meets at the Iowas Duals at Pella Saturday.

"We pretty much dominated everybody," Coach Jim Miller said. "We're making really good progress."

Wartburg's victories were against Central 41-3, Buena Vista 27-7, Simpson 33-9, Loras 38-6 and Cornell 33-16.

Zane Braggs, Chris Ristau, Tom Hogan, Lance Christenson, Michael Doyle, Jesse Molinar and Jon Dawley all posted perfect records for the day.

Among other Wartburg wrestlers, Jamal Fox (134) went 3-1, Darin Gaede (142) was 1-3, Eric Kimball (158) was 1-1, Brad Tholen (177) was 4-1 and Andy Bream (Hwt.) was 0-2.

The Knights wrestled without injured Kevin McCarthy (142), but Miller said he should be back for this weekend's Cornell Invite.

Miller said this 18-team, two-day meet is one of the best Division III tournmanents around.

Why did the Steelers fail to beat the Bills Saturday?

The Fan's Perspective

Brad Waller

For Pittsburgh Steelers fans everywhere, Saturday was truly a day of mourning.

In their first playoff experience since 1989, and their first playoff game at home since the 1982 season, the Steelers looked far from the divisional champions they were.

I have come up with my top five reasons the Pittsburgh Steelers failed to beat the Buffalo Bills and make the AFC Championship game. (The Bills won 24-3.)

5. Pittsburgh doesn't have enough playoff experience.

The Steelers have one of the youngest teams in the NFL, and many players either weren't with the team or were not yet out of college the last time Pittsburgh made the playoffs.

4. Rod Woodson's absence from the game during the third quarter.

Woodson is arguably the best cornerback in the league, and Buffalo made every attempt to exploit his absence. Bills' quarterback Frank Reich went right at Sammy Walker, Woodson's backup, and threw a touchdown pass to Walker's side.

3. Nell O'Donnell's broken leg.

Even though it's no longer broken, his three game lay-off at the end of the regular season hurt his performance. He seemed uncomfortable throughout the entire game and never established his passing game.

2. The Buffalo Bills are lucky.

They shouldn't have been playing in this game anyway. How could they have made up a 32-point difference the week before against the Houston Oilers? Because they're lucky and I hate them for all eternity.

1. Bubby Brister.

You are probably asking yourself what Bubby Brister did to hurt the Steelers' chances of victory. Absolutely nothing! But who better to blame it on than a guy with the name Bubby. Besides, he is a dreadful quarterback and his sideburns do him no justice.

So many of us die-hards could not help but think back to the glory days of the seventies, when Pittsburgh built one of the greatest dynasties in sports history. Who could forget Bradshaw, Lambert, Harris, and Mean Joe Greene?

But I have news for my Steeler cohorts; we must not let the stinging bite of a playoff loss draw away from the progress and success our team, yes, our team, has shown. To compare the Pittsburgh teams that won four Super Bowls to this year's team is wrong.

True Steelers fans will get over the sorrow of Saturday's loss (in a few weeks) and look to a much brighter 1993 season. Until then my faithful Steeler comrades, long live the 1978 Steelers, the greatest football team of all time.
